

BIO

Chris Durden is an Associate Professor at the Cairns campus of James Cook University, Australia.

He has a PhD in accounting from Massey University in New Zealand and is a qualified Chartered Accountant. Chris has extensive experience teaching accounting and management control to undergraduate, postgraduate and MBA students and has supervised numerous research projects including PhD's.

His research interests are primarily centred on management accounting and organisational control. Chris has published in a range of academic journals including Critical Perspectives on Accounting, Accounting, Auditing and Accountability Journal, Accounting Education: An International Journal, Journal of Accounting Education, Asia Pacific Journal of Management, and Advances in Accounting Behavioral Research. Prior to his academic career Chris worked in the pharmaceutical and oil industries and held positions in accounting and operations.